What does barbie doll symbolize

On July 24, 1952, a curvaceous bombshell named Lilli graced the pages of the German tabloid Bild Zeitung for the first time. Created by cartoonist Reinhard Beuthien, Lilli was worldly, single and in search of a rich boyfriend.Think of her as a modern, working girl version of Scarlett O'Hara in "Gone with the Wind." Deprivations brought on by World War II had worn down her spirit, except for a determination to be amply provided for. Passion no longer motivated dating; she was simply on a quest for the wealthiest suitor. Lilli was, in short, a gold digger -- and an attractive one at that. With mile-long legs, a generous bustline and scant clothing, Lilli charmed the magazine's largely male readership. In fact, her brassy personality and pinup figure wooed men so effectively that the cartoon Lilli was transformed into a doll in 1955.The Lilli doll, which came in 7-inch (17-centimeter) and 11-inch (27-centimeter) sizes, wasn't marketed to little girls -- it was intended for adult men. At that time, girls played with baby dolls and prepubescent-shaped fashion dolls. Lilli, on the other hand, had big, thickly lined eyes that gazed suggestively to the side. Her crimson lips puckered slightly with a flirtatious pout. Standing in black spike heels, Lilli's impossibly petite feet supported a distinct hourglass frame.With advertising taglines such as, "Whether more or less naked, Lilli is always discreet," and a wardrobe consisting of negligees, tiny tops and tight pants, Lilli dolls were essentially sex toys. People gave them as bachelor gifts, some men rode around with Lilli on their dashboards, and others bought them just for the cheap thrill out of peeping under her alluring ensembles [source: Lord].But when an American woman named Ruth Handler spied a Lilli doll in a store while vacationing in Switzerland, she didn't see it as a prurient novelty. Instead, she thought it would be the perfect toy for her daughter, Barbara. Handler had observed Barbara and her girlfriends playing with paper dolls that depicted teenage girls or adult women. To Handler, that was their way of practicing for adulthood. Yet, aside from the two-dimensional paper dolls, no other dolls available in stores portrayed the mature female body. For that reason, she bought two Lilli dolls for Barbara during that Switzerland trip in 1956 -- and one for herself. To determine the value of a 1959 Barbie doll, find out whether it is a #1 or #2 doll from that year. #1 Barbie dolls are generally worth more than #2 dolls, although condition affects the value. Barbie dolls from 1959 often range from $3,000 to $7,000. A 1959 Barbie doll is identifiable by its cat-eye-style black eyeliner, heavily arched eyebrows, pale vinyl body, red closed mouth and painted or stenciled face. These Barbies feature blonde or brunette flocked hair with curly bangs and a heavy plastic body. All 1959 Barbie dolls have red fingernails and lack iris colors. They come wearing a striped, black-and-white sleeveless swimsuit in synthetic fabric, as well as black plastic shoes, metal hoop earrings and white plastic sunglasses. The #1 Barbie dolls are distinguished by holes in their feet, which mark where copper tubes are inserted into their legs for structural support. All #2 Barbie dolls lack these holes, featuring solid plastic legs instead. Additionally, #2 Barbie dolls have ponytails, whereas #1 dolls do not. In all other respects, #1 and #2 Barbie dolls are identical. All 1959 Barbie dolls feature the model number 850 and have "JAPAN" stamped on the right heel. Their boxes are marked "Barbie™ Pats. If I knew as a child that my Barbie's hair could look as good as the dolls on Instagram account @velovetheroyaldolls, I would have had fewer dolls forced into early retirement after a session with my scissors left them with janky buzzcuts. Or, at the very least, I could have had a Barbie with hair that matched my own texture.The account run by Brazilian artist Rafinha Silva garners millions of views per video, in which he showcases how he takes the dolls from basic to total baddies. In one video, which currently has over 1.6 million views, Silva darkens a blonde doll's roots, adds curly extensions in track by track, and even blends the leave-out. He uses a tool that looks like a tiny curling wand to get the perfect coils. In other posts, he turns dolls into characters like Harley Quinn, The Little Mermaid, and celebrities like Cher.Don't let the 60-second transformation videos fool you. Silva told Allure in an email that it can take on average about 16 business days to customize each doll. Most of the dolls you see on his Instagram are made to order and cost $154 USD.Silva's favorite part isn't even the hair! "The part I love most about customization is eyebrows and eyelashes — I love eyelashes," he explained. Silva, who never studied cosmetology, says his work is paying the bills in spite of his lack of formal training. "The Royal Dolls are my main source of income. Before working with the dolls, I was a journalist. That was for a long time my greatest passion."OK, so he's a former journalist who now can slay a cut and color. Meanwhile, I can barely get my twist-outs together.Proving that teamwork makes the dream work, Silva, who started out by styling the dolls himself, now employs some help. "For a long time, I was my complete company. Today, I have incredible professionals who help me. I have a super creative head who makes all the clothes unique to the dolls. [I have someone] responsible for digital art, creating the new packaging for the dolls. I [command] most of the company, [doing the] social networking, creation, development, and delivery of the product to the carrier."I'm seriously impressed with the care and detail that goes into creating these dolls. I'd gladly dish out the cash to get one made in my likeness — or, maybe even one that looks like Beyoncé.More great hair we love:Now, find out how to get an '80s Barbie doll makeup look: Image: Pixabay by Alexas_Fotos Even if you didn't play with Barbie dolls as a kid, you most likely have heard of this iconic doll. Created in 1959 by Ruth Handler, the Barbie doll was meant to serve as an inspiration and a role model for little girls. The marketing for these Barbie dolls started in 1959 as well, with TV commercials causing the sales for these dolls to skyrocket. But it's not just the "Barbie" dolls that people love, as the Ken dolls, dream houses and fancy cars were (and still are) a big hit. Other notable Barbie appearances include Astronaut Barbie, Malibu Barbie, Surgeon Barbie and Gold Medal Barbie.Due to the success of Barbie dolls, a fan club was created, as well as a Barbie convention for fans. Diversity has also played a huge roll in the Barbie universe, with the "dolls of the world" collection showcasing various Barbie dolls from different countries. These dolls have also spawned movies, video games, songs and TV shows, as well as a Barbie smartphone app. And if fashion is your thing, a New York Barbie fashion runway show was actually created in 2009 to honor the iconic and beautiful outfits of Barbie dolls.
